Employment information

An acceptable café or restaurant setting would be one that provides food and beverage services prepared and consumed on the premises. Customers can expect that food is typically prepared on the premises under the supervision of a Chef and table service is provided. A diversity of dishes across a menu is generally provided by the café or restaurant.

Categories of acceptable restaurants include (but are not limited to):

- family style restaurants serving moderately priced food with fixed or à la carte menus. Table service is usually provided.
- casual dining restaurants serving moderately priced food in a casual atmosphere. These establishments typically offer table service or buffet-style dining.
- fine dining restaurants which are full-service establishments with menus that generally feature high quality ingredients with elaborate preparation.

In order to be considered as a Café or Restaurant Manager, the position must be responsible for every aspect of the café or restaurant's performance, including the management of all employees and their occupational development, oversight of establishment operations, management of sales and profit targets, and participation in business planning.

Fast food or quick service restaurants are not an acceptable context and applicants working in a managerial capacity in such establishments may be better suited to ANZSCO 142111 Retail Manager (General). The food preparation work carried out in a fast food outlet would generally require the skills of a Fast Food Cook, rather than a Chef.

Similarly, takeaway food service outlets are mainly engaged in providing food services ready to be taken away for immediate consumption. Customers order or select items and pay before eating. Items are usually provided in takeaway containers or other packaging. Food is consumed on the premises in limited seating facilities, taken away by the customer or home delivered. Food production may not occur on the premises.
