Employment

Highly relevant tasks include, but are not limited to:

- Monitoring sales data and stock levels, and studying trade, suppliers, and market information to keep informed of changing market conditions.
- Negotiating cost price, product purchase, quantities, deliveries, promotion, trading terms and other supply arrangements with suppliers.
- Designing and implementing pricing, marketing, promotional and visual display strategies.
- Liaising with management on long-term product planning and sales promotions.
- Establishing merchandise financial plans according to seasonal, trend, event and budgetary requirements.
- Researching and predicting consumers trends and determining quantity, style and quality of goods to be purchased.
- Deciding on product types, quantities, timing and locations across the retailers' multi-channel distribution network.
- Deciding on the deletion and clearance strategies of excess or expired stock through discounting whilst maintaining Gross Profit targets.
- Involved with the setting and achieving of the financial revenue, stock investment and Gross Profit targets for the retailer.

Employment information

Retail Buyers purchase goods to be sold in retail stores. They may purchase goods locally, interstate or overseas. In large department stores, Buyers may specialise in certain types of merchandise (textiles, fashion, hardware or toys, for example). In small businesses, owners normally do their own retail buying after consultation with their staff.

A positive skills assessment for Retail Buyer requires a dedicated retail buying role.
